Class Actions

Class action litigation involves high stakes cases with the real potential for literally making or breaking many of the defendants we represent.

These lawsuits are often referred to as “bet the company” cases. Our attorneys have been defending businesses of all types and sizes, as well as individuals, in class action cases for decades.

Whether filed in state court or federal court, we fight to achieve the best possible outcome for our client. We do so either as the only firm or as part of a team of firms retained to protect our client. In some cases, a group of defendants are joined in the same case, which often allows our clients to coordinate and cooperate with the other defendants for the benefit of all. We carefully evaluate and recommend to our clients the approach we think will work best for them in each case realizing each case has to be approached differently and that “cookie cutter” solutions are not what our clients are looking for when they are confronted with having to defend against a class action case.

We use these same skills to defend clients in related kinds of complex litigation, including multi-district litigation (MDL). We are frequently asked to represent clients in a wide range of industries, including banking and financial, insurance, accounting, tax preparation, automobile and other product manufacturing, chemical and energy production, municipalities and real estate providers.
