

Fiduciary & Trust Litigation

With an aging population there is an increase in wealth passing from one generation to the next primarily through bequests in wills, trust provisions, gifts to custodial accounts, buy/sell agreements and other planning devices.

This vast shift in wealth will be accompanied by the inevitable disputes between dissatisfied beneficiaries, family members, partners and shareholders on the one hand, and trustees, personal representatives and similar fiduciaries on the other. Additionally, there are increasing claims against attorneys, accountants, financial advisors, banks and others where parties are dissatisfied with the results of planning and trust and estate administration after the fact.
